Tell us your experience of generalised pustular psoriasis (GPP)

We're seeking to gain personal insight and experience of generalised pustular psoriasis (GPP). Generalised pustular psoriasis is a rare and serious form of psoriasis, that usually needs emergency treatment. It causes pustules that develop very quickly on a wide area of skin. The pus consists of white blood cells and is not a sign of infection.

The National Institute of Health and Care Excellence (NICE) will be appraising a new therapy to treat GPP. We will be making a submission to NICE, to provide the patients perspective and lived experience.

- To do this we need your views, this can be from a patient, carer, or parent perspective.
- You can tell us your experiences, by completing the survey.
- We are also seeking an individual to nominate as a patient expert to attend the meeting.
